

To determine what is on the flash drive given to him by Fury, Captain America and Black Widow take it to an Apple Store in a Washington D.C. shopping mall. The drive data references Camp Lehigh, the New Jersey base where Steve Rogers had trained as a soldier. Jamie Hallett at capital T executed visual effects work that transformed the nearly empty mall location into a bustling shopping center, as seen from the Apple Store window. "We extended the mall," explained Hallett, "and added everything you see outside the Mac store window, stitching together tiles they had shot in this nearly empty mall. I took the few people that were there and just looped their walk cycles and moved them around in the background." Hallett also did some work on shots of the characters attempting to get past agents by engaging in a long kiss on an escalator. "I had to do some work on the hood of Scarlett Johansson's sweatshirt, just for continuity's sake. The hood was down in the shot where she goes in for the kiss, and they needed it to be up; and so, we lined up the hood from another shot and tracked it in. We put a little bit of movement in it as her head was moving, too."